How to search for articles in a specific journal

Go to the Libraries’ home page and click on Journals:

Type in the title of the journal:

If you don’t know the exact title of the journal, use the options on the left to make the search more flexible:

Find the journal you’re looking for from the list of results. Note: If you get zero results, double-check your spelling.
Use the search box to search within a specific journal. You can type in key words, or if you have a citation and you need the full text, type in (or copy and paste) the article title.

Your search will take you to a new tab in your browser with the search results:

Alternatively, you can click on a database listed.

This example shows the CINAHL Complete database. From here, you can search within the journal. If you have a citation for an article, you can find it by clicking on the year, then the volume and issue number.
